models that on the one hand safeguard the essential educational mission of museums and enhance their aspects of engagement and entertainment, while on the other succeed in becoming truly open and inclusive spaces, beyond any educational or socio-economic barrier.

The session, chaired by Professor Pierluigi Sacco, scientific curator of Open Doors, and introduced by Francesca Bazoli, president of Fondazione Brescia Musei, and Stefano Karadjov, director of Fondazione Brescia Musei, will feature talks by Martina de Luca, Head of Education and Course Curator at Fondazione Scuola dei beni e delle attività culturali (New museum professions: new opportunities and new training demands), Arūnas Gelūnas, Director of the Lithuanian National Museum of Art (Education and museum futures: the Lithuanian experience), Zuzanna Schnepf-Kořacz, Curator of the Education Department of POLIN Muzeum Historii Źydów Polskich (Learning from history to understand the present: the POLIN Museum experience), Paola Zanini and Anna Pironti, Castello di Rivoli, Heads of the Education Department (Education is not about teaching but about learning together: the Castello di Rivoli experience).

A museum can thus become a valuable ally for all other educational institutions, as a space capable of orchestrating in a particularly powerful and effective way the whole grammar of emotions connected with learning, from amazement to wonder, from curiosity to surprise. Thus this is not only a matter of exploring new possibilities, but also of building on what has already been achieved, by consolidating the results in one area, bringing them back into play and rediscovering them in different contexts.
